SWINE.

The swine industry of Kentucky deserves much more attention than it now receives. Not only should the number of animals produced annually be increased but also the breeding and feeding should receive more careful attention.

To begin with, we cannot afford to raise any but the best hogs. By this we do not mean any particular breed, but we do mean that the animals should belong to some breed. A good grade is better than the average grade, to say nothing of the scrub. In two all important particulars is the pure bred animal superior; first, more economical gains are secured for the feed consumed, and second, when the animal is ready for market it will command the top price, whereas the scrub will probably sell 50 cents lower. Just here it is well to remember that this 50 cents reduction must be taken from our margin of profit, which is narrow enough already.

Inheritance largely fixes the possibilities of an animal, furnishing the detailed plans and specifications beforehand, while the feeding later builds the structure and maintains it. Some feeders advocate cross breeding of hogs, holding that the cross bred animals make better feeders. Even if we grant this to be true, the same feeder will admit that the second cross is very poor. Then in order to keep stocked with animals of the first cross we must be continually dependent upon the pure breeders for fresh stock of the two breeds concerned, always paying fancy prices.

One of the best features of any kind of stock farming is that it stimulates other farm activities. The feed should nearly all be produced on the farm. One important principle in feeding will be mentioned here. The young, growing animal requires a ration much different from that of the mature animal. The most important period of a pig's life is the time between weaning and his attaining 140 pounds weight. The growing animal requires much protein and ash to produce muscle and bone respectively, the purpose being to grow a frame upon which subsequently to lay a pad of fat. To meet the requirements of growth, suitable food must be provided. The cheapest gains can no doubt be made by providing alfalfa or clover pasture and giving a supplementary corn ration. In this case alfalfa provides the greater part of the protein and ash. The profitable feeding of pigs in winter is somewhat more difficult than in summer. In the winter season in this latitude, the lack of alfalfa pasture can be largely atoned for by young rye. This should be sown heavily, about four bushels per acre, drilling both ways.

Skim milk is one of the best known supplements for corn in feeding young swine, and we will do ourselves no harm by making an effort to produce more skim milk, for the dairy industry is highly profitable. Soy beans and corn, in the proportion of about one to six, make an excellent ration for young pigs, and the soy beans should by all means be grown on the home farm, for we thereby serve the double purpose of improving the soil by growing the legume and we provide one of the best possible pig feeds. High grade digester tankage one part, and corn nine parts is a good ration. For finishing the mature animal probably corn alone is best for all practical purposes.

By proper breeding and feeding we can obtain rapid gains and early maturity, thereby lessening cost of gains and danger from disease. T. R. BRYANT, Supt Extension Division, College of Agriculture, Kentucky State University.
